Our customers say...

We've used Alvas products since we started. The flexibility of studio configurations that the mirrors allow has been essential for us, and Matlay has served us well through many, many hours of rehearsals and performances. The barres are light, and can be conveniently broken down for transport, and the subfloor is beautifully balanced for shock absorption. Alvas is also a great supporter of dance in Southern California, and has excellent customer service. More than once I've been choreographing a commercial, and the production team has discovered they need a better floor. I've been amazed at how their guys get to the set and lay a floor.

Our journey began with a love story

Like something straight from the silver screen our founders Rosalie and Alva Lincir met in 1940 while dancing at the Miramar Hotel. They started their career as a dance team in 1941 and were married that same year. They pioneered in television, theatre and several motion pictures together.

In 1952, Alva built Rosalie her own beautiful dance studio and theatre in San Pedro, California. Here, they settled down to a teaching career performing in their own productions. Over 30 years ago, Alva retired and passed the company to his son, Matt.

In true entrepreneurial spirit, Matt has expanded the original studio into multiple studios and Alvas Barres, Floors Mirrors was born.

By combining the tradition started by Rosalie and Alva with Matt's inventive, economical and enthusiastic spirit, Alvas Barres Floors Mirrors is now the largest manufacturer of ballet barres in the dance industry, as well as one of the top three manufacturers of marley-type flooring, floating dance floors and glassless mirrors in the United States.

Today, our team continues to look for ways to share and inspire others with the same love and passion for dance that our founders began the company with. We hope to pass this tradition down to future generations.
